SECTION – A READING COMPREHENSION

Read the following paragraph below and answer the following questions:-

Vishal was climbing a tree. A sharp pain suddenly went through his arm, then another and another. He had put his foot on a wasp’s nest and they were after him. With a yell, he jumped to the ground. With tears running down his face, he ran to his mother. She knew what to do. Soon the burning pain got less and Vishal smiled again. “I hate wasps,” he said, “and I don’t like pain.”

Nobody likes pain. Yet pain helps to keep us safe from harm. If Vishal had not felt pain, he would not have known that the wasps had stung him. More wasps could have stung him on the neck, face, and legs and still he would not know. Each sting would have added more poison to his body. Soon he would have felt ill and would have fallen from the tree. The first feelings of pain were actually a safety signal for Vishal.

Lets take another example. It’s lunchtime and your mother has just given you some hot soup. You sip it slowly from your spoon because you know that hot soup burns your mouth. If you did not feel pain, you would swallow mouthful after mouthful. This would burn the inside of your mouth, your throat and your stomach. Without pain, you would be in danger every time you have a hot meal. So you see, pain helps to protect us from the dangers of stings, cuts and heat.
